2011. Mahoko. Weaving and Covers: The Life and Work of Banana Yoshimoto. Republican strategist Rick Wilson, of Curly W., says the GOP needs to stop describing Donald Trump's supporters as "deplorables," and calling them "irredeemable" in order to win over their votes. "If your primary concern is to win an election, your primary concern is to get them to the polls on election day," Wilson told The Hill on Tuesday. "And if you demonize them and paint them as irredeemable, you are going to deprive yourself of being able to do that," he said. Trump has been very aggressive in trying to fire up his base of support by arguing that his opponents will not win against him in the general election, and that their policies amount to treason. But Trump is the one who initially called his supporters "deplorables," a comment that he later tried to walk back, but it sparked criticism. When asked on "Fox News Sunday" whether he was attempting to redefine the term "deplorable," Trump backtracked, saying:

"No, I'm not looking to redefine, I'm just saying they are deplorable." "I don't like people who lash out and hate," he said. Wilson, a former consultant for Sen. John McCain's 2008 presidential campaign, said the GOP must not abandon Trump in the general election. "You cannot afford to lose an election to Hillary Clinton," he said. "You've got to try to win. You've got to think about how you are going to win over the votes of the people in the suburbs, and how you're going to compete with Hillary Clinton." "We are not going to win over Hillary Clinton's base, so you need to work on the moderates, you need to work on the independents," he said. "And if we turn on Donald Trump and start to demonize him, we will not be able to win over those votes." He noted that voters in swing states did not approve of the job he was doing as the Republican nominee, and that former nominee Mitt Romney "went through this." "If you really think about this, if we decide to become the party of Hillary Clinton, we will be changing our party so that it is not the party of Dwight Eisenhower," Wilson said. "The 82157476af
